WE ARE MACMILLAN.
CANCER SUPPORT

Supporting staff who look after someone

Around one in nine of your colleagues will be juggling work and looking after someone who is ill or disabled – such as a relative with cancer. With it being Carers Week, we're reminding employers that you can support these employees in a number of ways.

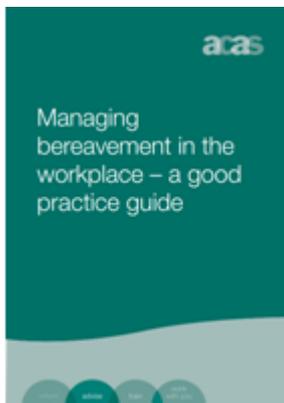

Showing you care

Flexible working hours and adjusting targets are just two possible changes you could make. These will help staff manage their caring responsibilities, while still making a valuable contribution to their workplace. By supporting employees at a difficult time, you'll also foster a sense of loyalty.

Bereavement at work

Research shows that one in ten employees is likely to be affected by bereavement. As an employer it can be a challenging situation to manage. To help you, ACAS have developed a good practice guide: Managing bereavement in the workplace.

Practical tools to support employees who are caring

Looking after someone with cancer can have an impact on an employee's physical and mental wellbeing. To help you support them we've created buddying guidelines and a carers policy for you to adapt.
