If you are unhappy with your care

About this easy read booklet

This booklet is about if you are unhappy with your care.

You can learn about who can help you if you are unhappy with your care.

If you are worried about your health, you should talk to a doctor or nurse.

Talk to your cancer team

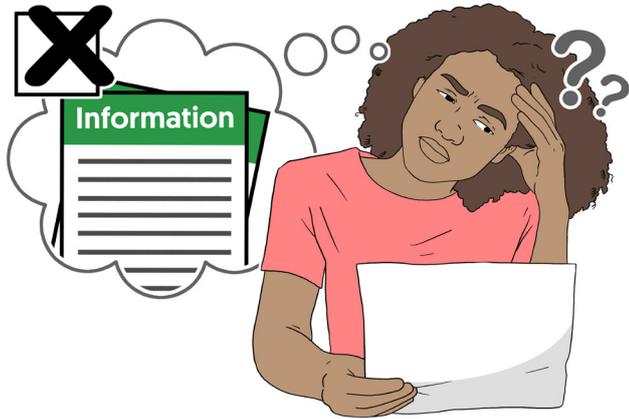

The doctors, nurses and other people in your cancer team are there to give you the best possible care.

But sometimes things might not go as well. Some things might make you feel worried or unhappy, for example:

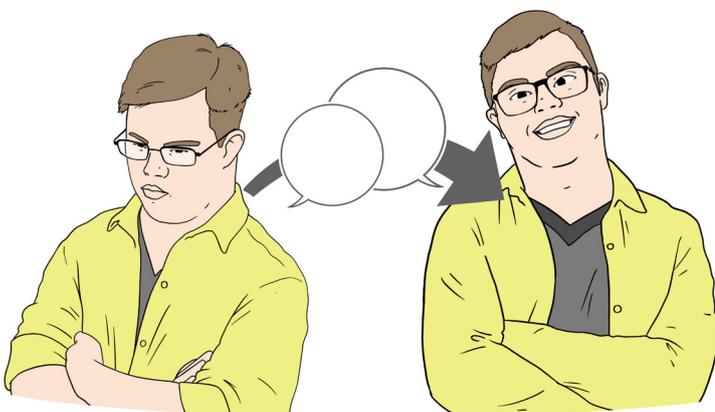

- your doctor or nurse did not listen to you or give you enough time

- you were not given information about the cancer or treatment in a way you could understand.

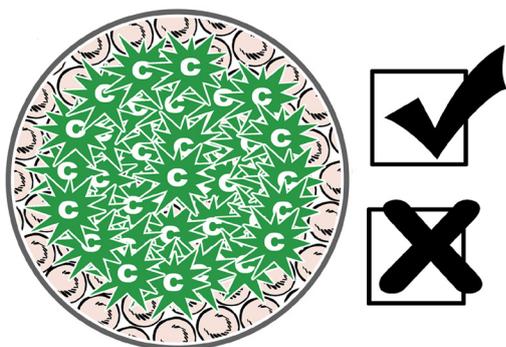

It is important to tell your cancer team if something or someone is making you feel bad.

Sometimes the problem can be sorted out by talking to the people involved.

If you are not sure about the treatment or information you are offered, you can ask for a second opinion. This means asking a different doctor if they agree with your diagnosis or treatment.

Diagnosis means finding out if you have an illness or not.

If you want a second opinion, talk to your doctor and they can tell you more about it.

Advocates

Sometimes it can be hard to talk about things that upset you. Or make people understand what is making you sad.

An advocate is a person who can help you make decisions and support you to tell other people your decisions.

An advocate can:

- help you explain how you feel

- go to appointments with you

- speak for you

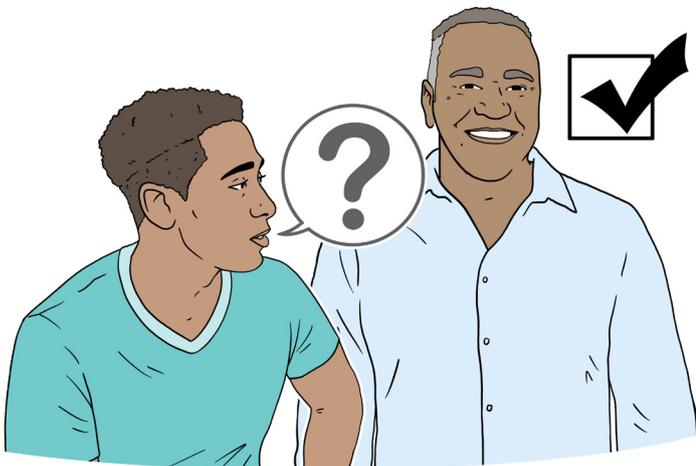

- help your team to understand what is upsetting you

- help you to write letters or fill in forms.

Some organisations can provide an advocate if you need help.

You can also ask a friend or family member.

Making a complaint

If you are still unhappy after talking to your cancer team, you have the right to make a complaint. Your thoughts and feelings are important.

Feedback and complaints can help your cancer team improve the way they work.

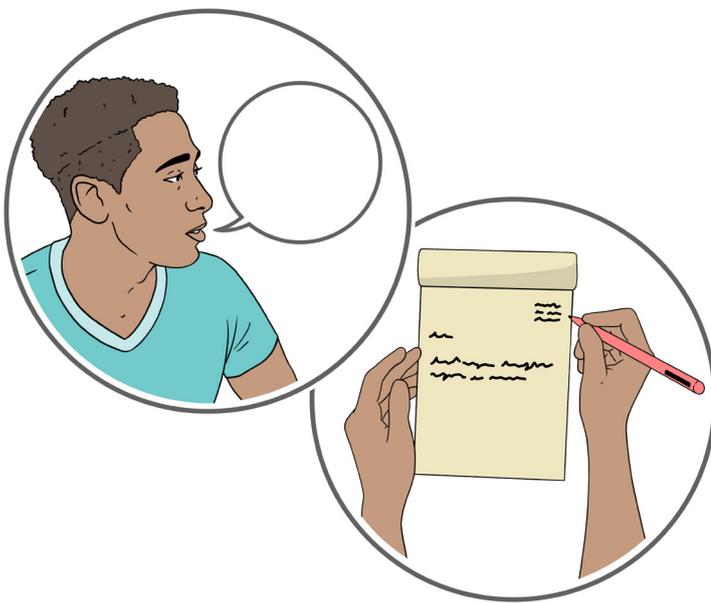

How to complain

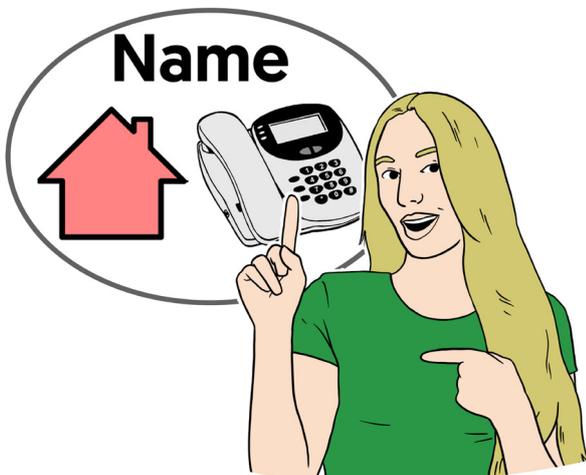

Ask your cancer team about how to complain.

Try to complain as soon as you can.

You can complain by writing a letter or by talking to someone.

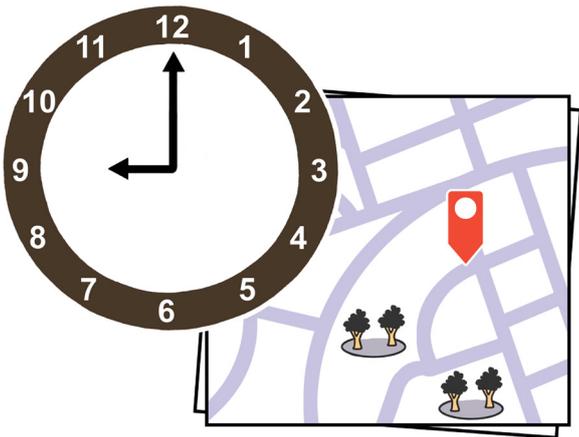

Try to give as many details as possible. Things like:

- your name, address and telephone number

- what happened

- when and where it happened

- who was involved

Making a complaint might be upsetting. But it can help you to understand what went wrong.

It may help your team understand what they can do to make sure the problem does not happen again.

Your rights

Your cancer team must always treat you with respect. This means treating you fairly and listening to you.

It is against the law to treat someone unfairly because of their:

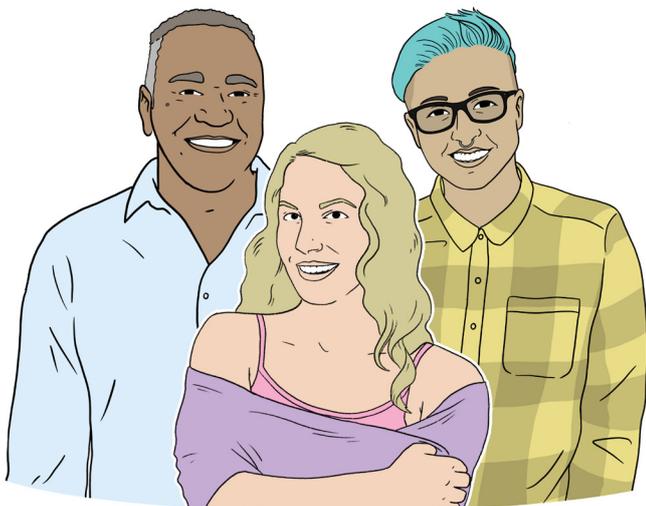

- age

- disability

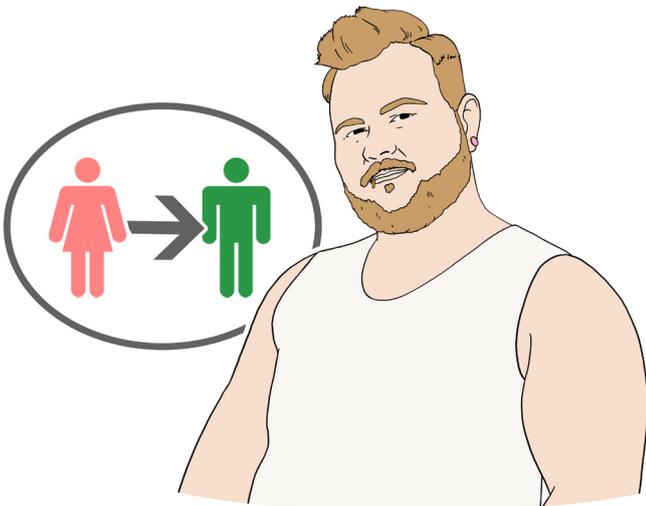

- Sex

- sexuality

This means who you are attracted to.

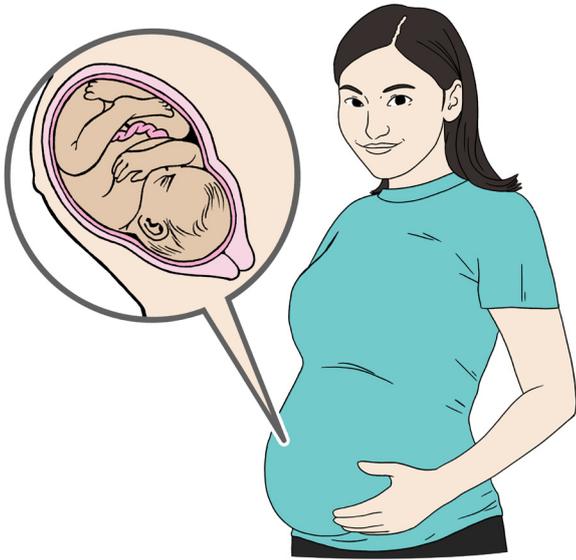

- gender reassignment

This means if you are a different gender than when you were born.

- marriage or civil partnership

- pregnancy

- race

- religion or belief.

If people are treated unfairly because of the reasons above, it is called discrimination.

If you do not feel safe or comfortable talking to your cancer team, tell someone you trust.
